The growth of screen-based communication relies on high quality rendering of texts. This requires well-designed characters, drawing on a deep knowledge of craft skills, techniques of adapting to optical sizes and job requirements, and cutting-edge technology. Such characters need to be produced in a wide range of styles and variations, to support the many types of documents in use. The design and engineering of Chinese characters demonstrate innovation and originality that are driving excellence in computer-based typography on a global scale.
